NEWSPAPERS AND THEIR

spaper man's life is not a bed o roses, and especially not in a new country where his work is plomeering for others to come after and reap the reward. And the worse of it is, that the general public takes but very little heed of his lot: Perhaps there is no country where his lines are as hard as in the North-West Territories. His public is so varied and mixed, he has to cater for the wants of high class intellects among the settlers as well as the msn of limited acquirements: On one hand he is looked upon as the educator of the public mind, the moniders and elevator of public opinion. While on the other, stern pablic mind, the moulders and elevator of public onful, the moulders and elevator of public opinion. While on the other, stern beceasity stares him in the face with the incorrobble fact. "that he is not here for his health." Some of his readers delight to bee their names in print as having called hit the post office, or having Miss Lilly Bud staying with them. Another set of Bud staying with them. Another set on subscribers desire leading articles on the Eastern Question, or Behring Sea dispute, and the Eastern Question, or Behring Sea dispute, but Agricaltural matter, and so on ad infinetum: So what is the poor country Editor to do! THE ORIGIN OF LIFE INSURANCE.

It is a curious fact that the "doctrine of probabilities," or the scentific basis upon which all insurance rests, had its origin in a game of carda. That is to say, the foundation upon which this west economy depends, and upon which it towes its claims to the confidence and upon which it is west its claims to the confluence and patronage of the community, originated from investigations regarding games of chance. It happened in this way: About the year 1600 the Chevallier de Mers, a French holizman, who was both a respectable matematical and an ardent names of the characteristic and an ardent names of the confidence o It is a curious fact that the "doctrine or robabilities," or the scientific basis upo
